Drivers often struggle to understand complex error codes displayed by their vehicle's OBD system thus creating problems and increasing time on fixing their car. When an individual plugs a Code reader to scan for problems in the car they first must input their make, model and other specifications that the code reader must read. After that it displays error codes that you then need to search on the internet for what is the problem. Then finally you must purchase the product for replacement or tools to repair the error.